FOREIGN MEAT INSPECTION 1977

Report of the Secretary of Agriculture to the Committee on Agriculture, House of Representatives , and the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, U.S. Senate

PART I.—Introduction

This is the tenth annual report on the administration of Section 20 of the Federal Meat Inspection Act.

To assure U.S. consumers that imported meat and meat food products are wholesome, not adulterated, and are truthfully labeled, the Food Safety and Quality Service (FSQS) of the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) is vested with the responsibility for the evaluation of the foreign meat inspection systems of countries eligible to export their meat products to the United States. This is carried out through on-site reviews of the certified foreign meat plants preparing product for export to the U.S. and the conduct of an import inspection of the product at the time it is offered for entry at U.S. ports.

Official Recognition of Foreign Countries

Only those countries which have meat inspection systems with standards at least equal to those of the U.S. meat inspection program are permitted to ship meat to the United States. In 1977, there were 46 such countries. Approval of a foreign country's meat inspection system is based on an evaluation of the particular country's laws and regulations governing its inspection program and on-site survey of the system in operation. Recognition is not accorded to any country without concurrence of the U.S. Department of State. Most of the approved countries gained official recognition many years ago.

Those countries which are currently authorized to export meat to the United States are:

Argentina	Finland	Nicaragua
Australia	France	Northern Ireland
Austria	Germany (Federal	Norway
Belgium	Republic)	Panama
Belize	Guatemala	Paraguay
Brazil	Haiti	Poland
Bulgaria	Honduras	Romania
Canada	Hungary	Scotland
China (Republic of)	Iceland	Spain
Colombia	Ireland (Eire)	Sweden
Costa Rica	Italy	Switzerland
Czechoslovakia	Japan	Trust Territory of the
Denmark	Luxembourg	Pacific Islands
Dominican Republic	Mexico	Uruguay
El Salvador	Netherlands	Venezuela
England and Wales	New Zealand	Yugoslavia

Certified Plants

Products may be imported only from those plants which foreign meat inspection officials have certified as meeting U.S. standards. Thus, not all plants of a foreign country with an approved inspection program are eligible to export to the United States. Some do not desire certification; others cannot qualify because of faulty construction or facilities, poor sanitation, or failure to meet other requirements. Part III of this report shows that some countries certify only one, two, or three plants. The countries of Austria, Colombia, Finland, Japan, Luxembourg, Norway, Scotland, and Venezuela had no certified plants in calendar year 1977. On December 31, 1977, nine countries--Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Canada, Costa Rica, Denmark, Mexico, New Zealand, and Poland--provided 83.5 percent of the foreign meat plants certified for U.S. export. They produced 85 percent of the meat imported in calendar year 1977.

Foreign Programs Staff

The Foreign Programs Staff in Field Operations, Meat and Poultry Inspection Program, of FSQS, has the responsibility to determine which foreign countries should be officially recognized. The staff reviews operations in certified foreign meat plants and coordinates the activities of U.S. import and export inspectors. In calendar year 1977, 20 veterinarians were assigned to conduct the foreign plant review function of the staff. Twelve of these employees were stationed overseas--one each in Brisbane, Canberra, and Melbourne, Australia; Wellington, New Zealand; Montevideo, Uruguay; San Jose, Costa Rica; Mexico City, Mexico; Ottawa, Canada; Copenhagen, Denmark; the Hague, Netherlands; Bonn, Germany; and Vienna, Austria. The remaining reviewers are stationed in Washington, D.C., and travel to their assigned countries on a rigorous schedule. All of these positions are filled by veterinarians with considerable experience in the domestic meat inspection program.

In addition, the Foreign Programs Staff plans, coordinates, and directs programs designed to insure uniform and effective inspection of products for U.S. import inspection at the point of entry into the United States. In total, about 100 domestic field inspectors are engaged in the inspection of imported meat. The staff also provides staff supervision to programs for the reinspection and certification of U.S. meat and poultry products for export shipments. The staff participates in various training sessions conducted during the year for import inspectors.

Operations of the Foreign Review Team

In calendar year 1977, U.S. veterinarians either singly or in teams visited each foreign plant certified for the export of meat to the United States as often as necessary to insure compliance with the law. Plants exporting large volumes and those having minor problems or past difficulties in meeting U.S. standards were observed most frequently. The judgments expressed in Subpart B of Part III of this report were made as a result of observations by the Foreign Programs Officers in each of these foreign plants.

USDA is continuously studying its policy on frequency of foreign meat plant visits. Factors considered are size, nature and complexity of a foreign operation, the demonstrated stability and quality of the foreign inspection program, the anticipated volume of U.S. exports, and the availability of U.S. reviewers.

Plants exporting large volumes and other plants of special concern are visited at least four times annually. All other certified plants are visited at least once or twice a year except for a group of certified, but non-exporting plants in Canada. Plants in this latter group are visited bi-annually. A study of Subpart B of Part III of this report shows these objectives were substantially achieved in 1977.

Detailed schedules for review of foreign meat plants are arranged with the officials of the foreign government by the Agricultural Attache of the United States Embassy. For U.S.-based reviewers, this is done shortly before or after arrival in the country. All countries have been most cooperative in granting access to their plants at the time requested. No claim is made that the visits are unannounced, but the Foreign Programs Officers are trained to consider this factor when making evaluations. They conduct an independent, in-depth survey of every feature requiring inspection in the foreign plant. In doing this, they check the same items that supervisory inspectors look for in U.S. plants.

For example, the U.S. veterinary reviewers insist on careful examination of the animals before and after slaughter, clean operating practices, sanitary maintenance and construction of facilities, necessary sampling for laboratory analysis, accurate labeling, inspectional controls over materials leaving and entering the plant, safe water supply, and effective supervision of inspectors. Reviewers are accompanied by representatives of the foreign inspection service and the two parties have a free exchange of technical information. During calendar year 1977, there were 8,616 inspectors employed by foreign governments in the 1,141 plants which export to the United States.

Action on Adverse Foreign Review Findings

To achieve uniformity and to maintain control over the program, Foreign Programs Officers are not permitted to order changes or take other definitive action until their findings have been evaluated by the Administrator, Food Safety and Quality Service. However, the Foreign Programs Staff is delegated authority to issue a product segregation order if, in the officer's opinion, the Administrator will probably remove the authority for a plant to export to the United States. In these cases, the foreign officials are asked to keep all product made after the time of the review separate and apart with the understanding that the segregated product cannot be exported to the United States if the plant is subsequently determined to be ineligible by the Administrator. Similarly, if the reviewer questions the eligibility of categories of products to enter the United States, such products may be ordered held separate pending a Washington, DC, Headquarters decision on the matter. This action may be taken irrespective of date of manufacture.

In addition to identification and rejection of ineligible plants and products, the Foreign Programs Staff continues to direct considerable attention to the correction of minor technical problems in foreign plants and systems. Although the nature of these findings at the time of the review did not warrant plant rejections, their prompt correction was made a requisite to continued export eligibility for the plants. In many cases the problem was caused by incomplete understanding by a foreign official of the application of U.S. technical requirements to a specific situation. Often there was a need to replace marginally acceptable facilities and practices with more modern equipment and better techniques.

On occasion, USDA officials suggested adjustments in the management practices of the inspection system to assure more effective and reliable performance. These changes often required considerable investment in plant rehabilitation costs and, in several countries, an increased allocation of funds to finance the inspection service. In practically all cases where sections of existing approved plants are remodeled, advanced design equipment was installed and the newest manufacturing techniques were implemented. Among adjustments in the management practices of foreign inspection systems were improvements in staffing patterns, increased training and supervisory capability, updating of regulations and other instructions, and the institution of improved inspection techniques and programs. USDA participation in negotiations and communications with the appropriate foreign governments insured that needed changes progressed at a satisfactory pace.

The action taken by the Administrator when deficiencies are reported by U.S. officers depends both on the nature of the deficiencies and on the foreign government's response to them. If no health hazard is involved and the particular deficiency can and will be corrected in a short period of time, shipments of products usually are not interrupted. In case of serious deficiencies, or where previously requested corrections have not been made, the eligibility of the offending plant or plants to export products to the United States is removed. Similarly, if the Administrator determines that the problem is system-wide, he may remove export authorization from all plants in a system, or if more appropriate, impose an embargo on products or classes of products from that country until USDA is convinced that U.S. standards are enforced.

The Administrator informs the official of the foreign country in writing of the adverse findings, any restrictive action required by U.S. law, and conditions he has established for maintaining or restoring eligibility to export. With more familiarity with the U.S. programs, however, most foreign officials no longer wait for such formal notification before taking appropriate remedial action of their own.

Other Developments

In 1977, the Meat and Poultry Inspection Program (MPI) was transferred from the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service to the newly formed agency, Food Safety and Quality Service.

At the beginning of calendar year 1977, there were 1,105 approved foreign plants. During the year 84 plants were removed from the approved list. Subsequently, 24 were reinstated. The plants were removed by foreign governments either at the request of the United States or for various other reasons. Among the latter were normal attrition, withdrawal from U.S. market, and decisions by the foreign government to remove a plant's eligibility before formal U.S. action is taken. Thirty-three of the plants removed in calendar year 1977 by the foreign government had been reviewed by Foreign Programs Staff Officers and were found not to meet the requirements of the Federal Meat Inspection Act.

In 1977, the Foreign Programs Staff received no new requests from countries seeking USDA recognition of their inspection systems preparatory to exporting meat and poultry products to the United States. Work continued toward granting recognition of the meat inspection system of one country. The Staff was also engaged in the publication and clarification of the special requirements of various foreign countries to the U.S. industry, thus enabling U.S. establishments to continue an export trade in the international sector.

Inspection of Meat Products on Entry

A meat inspection certificate issued by the responsible official of the exporting country must accompany each shipment of meat offered for entry into the United States. The certificate identifies the product by origin, destination, shipping marks, and amounts. It certifies that the meat comes from animals that received veterinary ante-mortem and post-mortem inspection; that it is wholesome, not adulterated or misbranded; and that it is otherwise in compliance with U.S. requirements.

As a further check on the wholesomeness of the meat, U.S. inspectors at the port of entry inspect part of each shipment. To assure that a representative sample is selected, statistical sampling plans are applied to each lot of product to be inspected. The sampling plans and criteria for acceptance or rejection of imports are the same as those used for U.S. federally inspected meat. Samples of frozen products are defrosted prior to inspection. Import inspectors check the condition of canned meat containers and open sample cans for inspection of contents. Labels are verified for prior U.S. approval and the accuracy of stated net weights is checked. Specimens are routinely submitted to meat inspection laboratories to check compliance with compositional standards. Sample cans are also subjected to periods of incubation for signs of spoilage.

Meat imports are monitored for biological residues, such as pesticides, hormones, heavy metals, and antibiotics, by selection of representative samples for analysis by U.S. laboratories. Special control measures are in effect for handling of import meat in which excessive amounts of residues are detected. The procedures include refusing or withholding entry to product until results of laboratory analyses are received.

Inspectors assigned to import inspection have wide experience in the domestic program. As a further aid to the import inspectors special schools are provided for additional training in this phase of inspection. The entire thrust of the program is for uniformity of import inspection and proper application of requirements to assure consumers that imported meats are as wholesome as domestic products.

A detailed report of plants and classes of products rejected for failure to meet U.S. standards is included in Part III, Subpart E and Part IV of this report. During calendar year 1977, 10,521,984 pounds of meat were refused entry. Totals are shown in Part IV, Table 2.

Poultry Imports

While no formal report on poultry product imports is required by the Poultry Products Inspection Act, it should be noted that these imports are controlled under regulations virtually identical to those applied to meat from livestock. Only Canada, France, and Hong Kong are authorized to export poultry products to the United States. The export meat and poultry program in France and Canada are for all practical purposes a single program. Therefore, many poultry plants in Canada and all but two or three in France are also certified meat plants, and as such, are subject to surveillance identical to that described in this report. Only limited quantities of poultry products, mainly specialty items, are imported into the United States from these countries.

During 1977 work was continued on the recognition of foreign poultry inspection systems for two other countries.

PART II.—Certification of Foreign Plants

Department inspectors made 2,502 inspections of authorized plants in 1977 calendar year. The date of each inspection is reported with the listing in Subpart B for the respective plant. Besides visits to authorized plants, inspectors made 218 inspections of plants not authorized to import products into the United States during 1977 calendar year.
